MEDIA RELEASE
MORE JOBS FOR WESTERN SYDNEY
WITH NEW MILK PLANT

Devondale milk will now come from Western Sydney after Murray Goulburn Cooperative’s $65 million processing plant in Erskine Park was approved by the Department of Planning and Infrastructure.

Member for Mulgoa Tanya Davies and Member for Smithfield Andrew Rohan welcomed the news today saying the approval was a big win for Western Sydney.

“This plant will create 45 on-going jobs in Western Sydney – that’s 45 paypackets being spent on local services and in local shops,” Tanya Davies said.

“These are high quality manufacturing jobs and I’m pleased that Murray Goulburn have chosen Western Sydney as the home of this new plant.

“It’s a big tick of confidence in Western Sydney and means more jobs closer to home.” Tanya Davies said.

Mr Rohan said that the plant would be located in Erskine Park within the Western Sydney Employment Area.

“The Western Sydney Employment Area is about making sure we have the infrastructure in place to support new jobs in our region,” Mr Rohan said.

“This is just another example of big business seeing the potential of Western Sydney and taking the chance to set up here – bringing jobs and investment.

“The prime location of Erskine Park on the corner of the M4 and M7 make it the perfect location for companies like Murray Goulburn to set up.”

The plant will process 150 million litres of milk each year for both Devondale and Coles brands.

The milk will be poured into one, two and three litre bottles and sold in supermarkets around NSW.
